And scores of other things, of a rich and artistic nature, suitable for Easter and Wedding Gifts.

A Magnificent Collection of EASTER MILLINERY

Embracing Every Style Phase That Has Been Duly Recognized by Fashion.

AN extensive and inclusive showing—models from leading Parisian Milliners, and original and distinctive adaptations produced by our own superior talent.

Style and becomingness are two absolute essentials in Millinery this season, and the ingenuity displayed by us in so charmingly grouping them together has produced the most clever and artistically rich models imaginable.

Hats for every occasion, for every face, for every hour—hats in all shapes and colors: Dark Hats, enlightened by vivid shades; Charming Black-and-white Hats, and some with black-and-white foundation, with a mingling of striking shades; Soft, Close-fitting Toques and Turbans, picturesque in their designing; bold, striking models, with roll and upturned brims; Picture Hats, with graceful, sweeping lines; Flower Hats, in all varieties of beautiful blooms.

The showing is complete, diversified, all-embracing—Dress Hats, Tailored Hats, Street Hats, Morning and Evening Hats.

Millinery Parlors, Second floor, Tenth st.

WOMEN'S EASTER SUITS Of Elegance and Dignity.

WOMEN who revel in elegance and dignity will find their every requirement catered to in this spring stock. Suits that are out of the ordinary, exquisite in style and making, reflecting the ideas of the foremost Parisian modistes, together with the smartest modes of the best American designers.

The new creams and creams with black stripes are very rich and striking, and nothing is more appropriate for Easter.

Cream Whipcord Tailored Suits, rich in beauty of line and faultless in finish; the stylish 24-inch coat is very natty and is lined throughout with messaline satin; the skirt, one of the very latest models, has panel front and back and fan plaits at sides. Altogether a very smart and attractive model.

Special price, $25.00 each.

New Serge Coat Suits, in cream with black hairline stripe; these have the 26-inch coats, and the very modish sailor collar is piped with black satin; skirts are plain effects with side plaits. A very original and striking model.

Special price, $25.00 each.

Rain-repel Coat Suits—guaranteed waterproof; something new this season and already very popular. Made up in rich plain and neat fancy effects, in black, tan and navy blue. Prices range from $37.50 to $45.00 each.

Third floor, G st.

THE NEW "IVY" CORSETS.

IN the "Ivy" Corsets, which we sell exclusively in Washington, you are not only assured of well fitting, correctly proportioned models for your particular figure, but are also assured of the most durable and lasting corsets possible to obtain.

The new models now displayed to meet the different variations of figure are as correct in every particular as they can be made.

A Display of the New Styles in WOMEN'S EASTER FOOTWEAR.

AN immense variety of distinctive and original models, that in no way exceed the bounds of conservative good taste. This complete stock was made especially for us, according to our own specifications, and are not only perfect in quality and workmanship, but perfect in fit as well.

The designs are expertly devised and the materials carefully selected to harmonize exactly with the newest lines of fashion, and with the costume for every occasion.

Materials are tan and black Russia calfskin, gun metal calfskin, patent kidskin and coltskin, dongola kidskin, suede, satin, velvet and white canvas, in Plain Pumps, Dresden Ties, Pocono Ties and Court Ties, in two, three and four eyelet effects; some with plain toe, others with tips, and either welt or turn sole; a varied range of heights in heels.

$3.00 to $6.00 the pair.

Third floor, Tenth st.

Woodward & Lothrop.

WOMEN'S EASTER COSTUMES.

Novel and Individual Models.

NOVELTY, Individuality and Fairly Endless Variety—ability to meet every possible whim and fancy—fittingly sums up the story of the new Spring Costumes in our display—a display that is thoroughly representative, and that comprises all the most fashionable creations—such as will meet with the approval of the most conservative as well as the most fastidious taste.

For Easter nothing more charming than these beautiful fouldars.

Satin Fouldars in the newest and most attractive models, presenting the new plain shades, two-toned stripes and polka-dotted and figured effects; some have high necks, some Dutch necks, and others show the new sailor collar. The skirt models are all new, and the kimono sleeve is greatly in evidence.

Price, $25.00 each.

A very dainty model is of colored fouldar with a fancy figure and dainty border to match; the yoke and half sleeves are of plain satin to match, and the lace collar and cuffs are brightened with a touch of coral. Kimono sleeves and a decidedly new skirt model compete this very distinctive dress.

Price, $35.00 each.

The Marquissettes have a place of their own in the new fashions. One very handsome model is trimmed with wide bands of cluny and crochet buttons. The sleeve is the new kimono effect and the skirt is finished with lace insertion and tucks.

Price, $25.00 each.

Very pretty are the White Linen Dresses. Some are hand-embroidered, others are richly trimmed with fine embroidery and lace insertion. High and Dutch necks, with kimono sleeves and plain trimmed skirts. Prices range from $18.75 to $30.00 each.

Third floor, G st.

KIMONO SLEEVE WAISTS With Colored Embroideries.

THESE unusually attractive waists are the rage in the fashionable circles of Paris, Berlin and London, and have received instant recognition in New York and Washington.

Models in white and delicate colorings and very effective combinations on white bodice. Trimmings of hand embroidery, in all the season's fashionable colorings, including Helen pink; also attractive yoke and cuff effects in lovely colorings and combinations of white.

Another fascinating waist has a very pretty yoke with touches of Bulgarian embroidery, both on crepe and self-materials. Shown in all the newest models.

As there is a scarcity of these waists we would advise those who wish the pick of the newest style ideas to make selection at an early date.

Prices range from $5.75 to $19.50 each.

Third floor, G st.

Marquissette Waist Pattern Special.

WE have just received and placed on sale another shipment of those dainty Marquissette Waist Patterns that have caused such a furore. They are stamped for embroidering, and in this lot are many new and handsome designs. An exceptionally good value at 50c each.

Main floor, F st.

Women's Silk Hose At a Special Price. An opportunity to supply your Easter needs in Hosiery at a decided saving. Just received and placed on sale at a third less than regular price, 50 dozen pairs Women's Good Quality Black All-silk Hose, strengthened by double cotton soles. All sizes in the lot. 50c a pair. IAN HAY,

AUTHOR OF "THE RIGHT STUFF."

"Well, look here," said Leroy. "can't you give us some sort of explanation—some yarn we could put about the place to account for this state of things?"

"What state of things?" said Hughie, doggedly. He was in an unpleasant temper.

"Well, Hughie," said Mrs. Leroy, keeping hers, "here is Joan, known to have been left a lot of money for her immediate use—she admits it herself—being quite humbly and cheaply, and obviously not well off. People are asking why. There are two explanations given. One, the more popular, is that you have embezzled or speculated the money all away. The other, which prevails among the elite—

"The people who are really in the know, you know," explained Leroy.

"Yes," they said, "continued his wife, 'that Joan won't marry you, so you have retaliated by—'

"By cutting off supplies," suggested Hughie.

"Yes, until—"

"Until she is starved into submission—eh?"

"That's about the size of it, old son," said Leroy.

There was a long pause. Finally, Hughie said:

"Well, it's a pretty story; but, honestly, I'm not in a position to contradict it at present."

Mrs. Leroy desisted from plaiting the window cord, and, with a well-deliberately to the fireplace and laid a hand on Hughie's arm.

"Hughie," she said, in tones which her husband subsequently affirmed would have drawn ducks off a pond, "what have you done?"

Leroy followed his wife across the room. "Get it off your chest, old man," he said, with the air of a father confessor.

Hughie smiled gratefully. He took Mrs. Leroy's two hands into one of his own and laid the other on Jack Leroy's shoulder.

"Jack and Milly," he said, earnestly, "my two pals—I would rather tell you than anybody else; but—I simply can't! It's not my secret! You'll probably find out all about it some day. At present I must ask you to accept my assurance that I'm not so black as I'm painted."

"Hughie," said Mrs. Leroy, "you are simply stupid! We have not come to you out of idle curiosity."

"I know that," said Hughie, heartily. "And I think you might give us some sort of an inkling, sort of a favorable bulletin—that I could pass on to Joey, at any rate."

"Joey," said Hughie, involuntarily; "Lord forbid!"

Mrs. Leroy, startled by the vehemence of his tone, paused; and her husband added, dejectedly:

"All right, old man! Let's drop it! Sorry you couldn't see your way to confide in us. Would you have gone any further. Rather sick about the whole business—eh? No wonder! Money is the devil, anyway."

Somewhat Leroy's words hit Hughie harder than anything that had been said yet. He wavered. After all—

"We've bought the hat, and I'm perfectly ravenous," announced Joan, appearing in the doorway. "And we've brought Mr. D'Arcy. Hughie, are those plover's eggs?"

"Oh!"

This was no atmosphere for the breathing of confidential secrets. The party resumed the usual demeanor of off-hand British insouciance, and began to gather round the luncheon table. Only Mr. D'Arcy's right eyebrow asked a question of Mrs. Leroy, which was answered by a slight but regretful shrug of the shoulders.

Hughie's apartment was L-shaped, and the feast was spread in the smaller arm, out of the way of draughts and doorways. Consequently, any one entering the room would fail to see the luncheon table unless he turned to his left and walked round a corner.

Hughie was helping the plover's eggs—it is to be feared that Miss Gaymer received a Benjamin's portion of the same—when Mr. Goble suddenly appeared at his elbow and whispered in his ear:

"Him again!"

Muttering an apology, Hughie left the table and walked round the corner to the other arm of the room. Lance Gaymer had just entered. His face was flushed, and his eyes glittered, and Hughie's half-uttered invitation to him to come in and have some lunch died away upon his lips.

"Hello, Lance!" he said, lamely.

Mr. Gaymer replied, in the deliberate and portentously solemn tones of a man who is three parts drunk:

"I understand you have got a party on here."

"Yes," said Hughie, endeavoring to edge his visitor through the doorway.

"What I want to say," continued Mr. Gaymer, in a low voice, "is that I accuse you of embezzling my sister's property, and I'm going to make things damned hot for you. You don't go and tell that to your luncheon party round the corner!"

He concluded with a snort. "And—glug—glug—glug!"

By this time he had been judiciously backed into the passage, almost out of sight, of the doorway.

Simultaneously Mr. Goble's large hand closed upon his mouth from behind, and having thus acquired a good purchase, turned its own devilry round and conducted him downstairs.

Deathlike silence reigned at the luncheon table. Hughie wondered how much they had heard. Not that it mattered greatly, for Master Lance's accusations, whether true or false, were of no consequence, partook very largely of the nature of those already leveled at Hughie by more conventional persons.

Before returning to his seat, Hughie crossed to the window and looked down into the street.

There, Lance Gaymer was being assisted into a waiting hansom by the kindly hands of Mr. Guy Halliburton.

Hughie, having seen all he expected to see, returned with faltering steps to his duties as a host.

It was a delicate moment, calling for the exercise of much tact. Even Mildred Leroy hesitated. Joan had flushed red, whether with anger, or sympathy, it was hard to say. Mr. D'Arcy regarded her curiously.

But heavy-footed husbands sometimes rush in where angels fear to tread. Jack Leroy cleared his throat.

"Hughie, having seen all he expected to see, returned with faltering steps to his duties as a host."

"When you've quite done interviewin' all your pals on the doormat, perhaps you'll give your guests a chance. With so many old friends collected round your table like this, we want to drink your health."

"You don't go and tell that to your glass, Miss Harbord! No heel taps, Milly!"

There was an irrelevant bonhomie about this whole speech which struck exactly the right note. Mrs. Leroy glanced gratefully at her husband and lifted her glass. The others did the same. But it was Joan who spoke first.

"Hughie," she cried, with glowing eyes. "Hughie," she cried every one. "Good health!"

In the times of our prosperity our friends are always present; but in times of adversity, generally a nuisance, and sometimes utterly detestable. But there is no blinking the fact that they are a very present help in trouble.

Hughie suddenly felt himself unable to speak. He bowed his head humbly, and made a furious onslaught upon a plover's egg.

CHAPTER XVI.

In Which Charity Suffereth Long, and Joan Misses Her Cue.

Hughie spent the next few months chiefly in wondering.

He wondered what Mr. Halliburton's game might be. What was he doing being named Lance Gaymer? That the latter might consider himself justified in poking his nose into his only sister's affairs was understandable enough—but why drag in Halliburton? Was that picturesque ruffian a genuine friend of Lance's, or was he a brotherly endeavor to readjust Jimmy Marrable's exceedingly unsymmetrical disposition of his property, or was he merely a member of that far-reaching and conspicuously able fraternity (known in sporting circles as "the nuts"), to whom all mankind is fair game?

Who was the man who had uttered that proverb on the subject of a fool and his money, pursuing his ordinary avocation of "making a bit"? In other words, was Lance Gaymer pulling Halliburton, or was Halliburton pushing Lance Gaymer?

Hughie also wondered about a good many other things, notably:

(a) Joan, coupled with dim speculations as to how it was all going to end.

(b) More Joan still, together with a growing desire to go off again to the ends of the earth and lose himself.
